

Exercise 3

The `#pragma omp master` command dictates that the enclosed block of code is executed only by the master thread (which is always thread ID 0). The critical difference between master and single is that a master block does not have an implicit barrier at the end. While thread 0 executes the master block, all other threads will completely bypass it and immediately execute the final "Hi again" print statement without waiting for thread 0 to finish.